SHORE THING

A fresh, unbuttoned Palm Beach vibe inspires Mish Tworowski's new seaside-chic jewelry line.

Mish Tworowski loves Palm Beach. The jeweler is a sponsor of the Palm Beach Preservation Foundation and recently bought a house in town with his partner, Joseph Singer. "The whole place inspires me," Tworowski says.

The city also sparked his latest collection of breezily elegant goods that dress up or down with ease. There are large-scale gold starfish earrings delicately lined with diamonds; simpler scallop shells with diamond-studded French hooks; a jingly charm bracelet dangling with sparkling pendants. All are meant to be mixed at a whim: "The world is so casual these days," he says. "It's more sophisticated not to be matchy-matchy. Modern women don't want a full parure." mishnewyork.com.
